15. Read the passage carefully and answer Questions 15, 16 and 17. [5]

Kites over Jaipur

On 14 January, the people of Jaipur wake up early and rush to their rooftops. It is Makar Sankranti, and the sky soon fills with kites of every colour. Children hold the strings carefully, while elders cheer from behind. Shouts of 'Wo kata!' ring out whenever a kite is cut. Families eat til laddoos and gajak, and share them with neighbours. Though the day is cold, the warm sun and the cheerful mood make everybody feel happy. Before sunset, some people also feed cows and give clothes or food to poor people because they believe that giving brings good luck. At night, small paper lanterns rise into the sky and glow like stars. People say that on this day the sun begins its journey towards the north, and the days slowly become longer.
