The Tiger

The tiger is the largest member of the cat family and India's national animal. A full-grown tiger may be three metres long and weigh over two hundred kilograms. Its orange coat with black stripes helps it to hide in tall grass, and no two tigers have the same pattern of stripes, just as no two people have the same fingerprints.

Tigers are great hunters but they hunt mostly at night. They move silently on soft padded feet and creep close to their prey before leaping. They eat deer, wild boar and other animals. Unlike lions, tigers prefer to live alone, and each tiger guards its own area of forest.

A hundred years ago there were many thousands of tigers in India, but hunting and the loss of forests reduced their number sharply. In 1973 the government began Project Tiger, setting up special reserves such as Ranthambore in Rajasthan. Thanks to this effort, the number of tigers has slowly risen again. Visitors to Ranthambore are thrilled when they see a tiger resting beside an old fort wall.

The Broken Pencil

Raj opened his pencil box and frowned. His favourite pencil, the long blue one with a silver eraser, lay broken in two. Seema, who sat beside him, looked away quickly. She had borrowed it that morning and dropped it on the floor.

Raj's anger rose. 'You have ruined my pencil!' he said loudly. The whole class turned around. Seema's eyes filled with tears. 'I am sorry,' she whispered. 'I will buy you another one.'

Raj felt ashamed. He saw how sad she looked, and he remembered how often she had helped him with sums. 'It is only a pencil,' he said gently. 'Don't worry.' Then he took the two pieces and joined them with a bit of tape. 'See? It works!' he laughed. Seema smiled through her tears, and from that day the two became the best of friends.
