The Importance of Breakfast

Doctors often say that breakfast is the most important meal of the day. After a night's sleep the body has gone without food for ten or twelve hours, and it needs fuel to start the day. A child who skips breakfast may feel sleepy in class, find it hard to concentrate and become tired quickly.

A healthy breakfast should have a little of everything. Milk or curd gives calcium for strong bones. Parathas, poha, upma or idli supply energy. Eggs, sprouts or dal give protein, which helps the body to grow. A fruit adds vitamins and fibre. In India many families begin the day with warm foods like these, which are tasty as well as nourishing.

Some foods, however, are better left out. Sugary cereals, packaged biscuits and fried snacks may taste good, but they give only a short burst of energy and then leave us hungry again. If we cannot avoid them, we should eat them rarely and in small amounts. A glass of water first thing in the morning is also a good habit. Remember: a good breakfast today means a bright mind tomorrow.

The New Girl

Nisha stood outside the classroom door, her bag clutched to her chest. It was her first day in a new school in a new city. Through the glass she could see forty children laughing and chatting, and not one face she knew. Her stomach felt full of butterflies.

‘Come in, dear,’ said Mrs Kapoor warmly. ‘Everyone, this is Nisha.’ Nisha walked to the empty seat at the back and sat down, looking at her shoes. During recess she stayed in her seat and ate her sandwich alone.

A girl with two long plaits came and sat beside her. ‘I am Ritu,’ she said. ‘Do you like skipping?’ Nisha nodded shyly. ‘Then come along!’ said Ritu, pulling her by the hand. Soon Nisha was jumping, counting and laughing with five other girls. When the bell rang she was surprised that recess was over. That evening she told her mother, ‘Mummy, I think this school is going to be fun.’
