Road Safety

Every year thousands of people are hurt on our roads, and many of these accidents could have been avoided. Road safety is not only the duty of the police; it is the duty of every person who walks, cycles or rides in a vehicle.

Pedestrians should walk on the footpath. Where there is none, they should walk on the right side of the road facing the traffic. To cross the road, one must use a zebra crossing or a foot-over-bridge, and look both ways before stepping off the kerb. Cyclists should keep to the left and use a bell or light at night.

Traffic lights speak a simple language. Red means ‘stop’, yellow means ‘get ready’ and green means ‘go’. Drivers and riders should wear helmets and seat belts. Children should never run after a ball into the road, and should never travel on the roof of a bus or hang out of a door. Road signs, such as the school-ahead sign, warn us about hidden danger. If everyone follows these rules, our roads will be safer, and families will reach home safe.

Rohan's Bag

Rohan was running late. He pushed his books into his bag, gulped down his milk and dashed to the bus stop. The bus had already left! He ran after it, waving, and luckily the driver saw him and stopped.

Breathless, Rohan climbed in and found a seat. It was only when he reached school that he noticed his bag felt light. He opened it and found, to his horror, that he had stuffed in his football kit instead of his notebooks. His maths test was in the very first period.

'What shall I do?' he thought. Then his friend Imran, who sat beside him, whispered, 'Share my notebook and pens. Next time, pack your bag the night before.' Rohan was grateful. He wrote his test on borrowed paper and, though he made two small mistakes, he finished it. That night he packed his bag carefully, and in the morning he reached the bus stop five minutes early.
