The Busy Honeybee

A honeybee lives in a large family called a colony. A single colony may have fifty thousand bees, and every bee has a job. The queen is the only bee who lays eggs. The worker bees, who are all female, clean the hive, feed the young bees and guard the door. The male bees, called drones, do very little work, and their main purpose is to mate with a queen.

The most interesting work is done by the bees that collect food. A worker flies from flower to flower and sucks a sweet liquid called nectar. She carries it home in a special stomach and turns it into honey. While she moves among the flowers, tiny grains of pollen stick to her legs and fall on the next flower she visits. In this way bees help plants to produce fruits and seeds. Many of the fruits we eat would not exist without them.

When a bee finds a good patch of flowers, she returns to the hive and performs a dance. The direction and length of her dance tell the other bees where the flowers are and how far they must fly. Scientists call this the 'waggle dance'. Today, however, honeybees are in danger because of pesticides and the loss of wild flowers. If we wish to save them, we must grow more flowering plants and use fewer chemicals.

(i) Who is the only bee that lays eggs in the colony? 1

(a) The worker (b) The guard (c) The queen (d) The drone

(ii) Worker bees are: 1

(a) all female (b) all male

The Lost Kite

It was the last day of the kite festival, and the sky over Jaipur was full of colours. Meena stood on her terrace holding a bright red kite that her grandfather had made for her. "Hold the string gently," he had said, "and let the wind do the work."

The kite rose higher and higher until it looked like a small red flower in the blue sky. Meena laughed with joy. Suddenly a boy on a nearby roof sent his green kite across her string. Snap! Her red kite jerked, tore free and floated away over the houses.

Meena's eyes filled with tears. She ran down the stairs and out into the lane, following the kite with her eyes. It dropped at last near the old well at the end of the street. When she reached the spot, she found the green-kite boy already there. He was holding her red kite carefully in his hands.

"I am sorry," he said. "I was only trying to win, but I never wished to spoil your day. I have mended the torn corner with a little glue." Meena looked at the neat repair and smiled. "Thank you," she said. "Come, let us fly it together." That evening, two kites, one red and one green, danced side by side above the town.

(i) Who had made the red kite for Meena? — 1

(a) Her father (b) The green-kite boy
(c) Her brother (d) Her grandfather

(ii) Why did Meena's kite float away? — 1

(a) It was too heavy (b) Another kite cut her string
(c) She let go of it (d) The wind stopped

(iii) Where did the red kite fall? — 1

(a) In a river (b) Near the old well
(c) In a garden (d) On a roof

(iv) State whether True or False: The boy refused to return the kite. — 1

(a) True (b) False

(v) The word 'mended' in the passage means: — 1

(a) lost (b) painted (c) repaired (d) broke

(vi) What advice did the grandfather give Meena about flying the kite? — 1

(vii) How did Meena feel when the kite went away? — 1

(viii) Why did the boy say he was sorry? — 1

(ix) How did the boy repair the kite? — 1

(x) What does the ending of the story show about Meena? Choose one quality and give a reason. — 1
