The Roof of the World

Mountains are among the most magnificent features of the earth. They rise high above the land around them, and their tops are often covered with snow throughout the year. The highest mountain in the world is Mount Everest in the Himalayas. It is about 8,849 metres tall and lies on the border between Nepal and Tibet. Because of its height, Everest is sometimes called 'the roof of the world'.

Climbing a high mountain is a difficult task. The air at great heights is thin, which means there is less oxygen to breathe, and climbers often carry cylinders of oxygen with them. The temperature can fall far below zero, and fierce winds and sudden storms add to the danger. Climbers therefore train for months and travel with guides who know the mountain well.

In 1953 Edmund Hillary of New Zealand and Tenzing Norgay, a Sherpa from Nepal, became the first people to reach the top of Everest. Years later, in 1984, Bachendri Pal became the first Indian woman to do so. Her success inspired thousands of girls in India to take up adventure sports. Mountains teach us patience, courage and respect for nature, and they remind us that great goals are reached one careful step at a time.

Grandmother's Garden

Behind my grandmother's old stone house
There is a garden small,
With marigolds and curry leaves
Along the crumbling wall.

She wakes before the sparrows do
And waters every plant;
She talks to them in a whisper-song
As though each one could chant.

"A seed," she says, "is a promise, child,
Which must be kept with care;
A little water, a little love,
And the sun will do its share."

Now Grandma's gone, but every spring
The marigolds still smile,
And I keep her promise in my heart
And in a flowerbed pile.
