From Waste to Wealth: Recycling Paper

Every day we use a great deal of paper, in notebooks, newspapers, boxes and packets. Paper is made from wood pulp, and wood comes from trees. To make one tonne of paper, many full-grown trees have to be cut. If we continue to waste paper, our forests will shrink, and animals and birds will lose their homes.

Recycling is a way of making new paper from old. First, waste paper is collected from homes, schools and offices. It is then sorted and sent to a factory, where it is soaked in water and broken into a soft pulp. Ink is removed from the pulp, which is then spread out, pressed and dried into fresh sheets. Recycled paper uses less water and energy than paper made from new wood, and it saves trees.

Each of us can do something to help. We can use both sides of a sheet, reuse old envelopes and give old newspapers to the raddiwala. Schools can set up collection bins for used paper. These small habits, if followed by everyone, will make a big difference. As the saying goes, 'Reduce, reuse and recycle', and in this order, because the best waste is the one that is never created.

Ravi's First Chess Match

Ravi had learnt chess from his uncle during the summer holidays, and he loved the game. When the school announced an inter-house chess competition, he put his name down at once. But as the day came closer, his stomach began to feel funny. What if he lost in front of everyone?

On the morning of the match he sat across the board from Nishant, the school champion. The hall was silent except for the soft click of pieces. Within ten moves Ravi lost his queen, and his hands began to shake. He wanted to stand up and walk away.

Then he remembered his uncle's words: "A game is never lost until you stop thinking." Ravi took a deep breath and looked at the board again. He saw that Nishant's king was not well guarded. Step by step, he moved his knight and then his rook. Nishant frowned and thought for a long time.

In the end Ravi lost the match by a single move, but the teacher clapped for both players. Nishant shook his hand and said, "You nearly beat me. Play again next month." Ravi walked home smiling. He had not won the trophy, but he had won something more valuable: the courage to try.
