Start the Day with Breakfast

Many people say that breakfast is the most important meal of the day, and there is good reason for this. After a night's sleep, the body has gone without food for ten or twelve hours. Breakfast gives it the fuel it needs to begin the day. A child who skips breakfast often feels weak and sleepy by the second period, finds it hard to concentrate and may become cranky.

A healthy breakfast need not be fancy or costly. It should include something from each of the main food groups: grains such as roti, poha or oats; protein such as milk, eggs, sprouts or dal; and fruits or vegetables. Fried snacks, sugary biscuits and fizzy drinks may taste good, but they provide very little nourishment and make us hungry again within an hour.

Taking a few minutes for breakfast also teaches discipline. The family that sits together to eat in the morning shares news, jokes and plans for the day. Waking up ten minutes earlier is a small price to pay for such a good start. After all, a car cannot run without fuel, and neither can a student.

(i) Why is breakfast important? 1

(a) It is tasty (b) It replaces lunch

(c) It is always costly (d) The body needs fuel after a night without food

The Fisherman's Net

Rahim was a young fisherman who lived by a lake. Every morning he rowed out in his small boat and cast his net. Some days the net came back full of silver fish. On other days it came back empty, and then Rahim and his old mother went to bed hungry.

One windy morning he felt the net grow heavy. He pulled with all his strength, and up came a large, beautiful fish with golden scales. It looked at him with wide eyes. "Please let me go," it seemed to say. "I have little ones waiting." Rahim hesitated. This one fish would feed him for a week. But he thought of his own mother waiting at home, and he understood how the fish felt.

Gently he lowered the fish back into the water. It flipped its tail, gave him one last glance and vanished into the deep. Rahim cast the net again and again, but caught nothing that day. He rowed home slowly, wondering what he would tell his mother.

When he reached the shore, he was surprised to see a crowd. A merchant who had watched from the bank walked up to him. "I saw what you did," the man said. "A person who shows such mercy deserves a better living. Come and work in my fish market, and I shall pay you fairly." From that day Rahim never went to bed hungry again.
