1. Read the passage carefully and answer the questions that follow. 10

Failure is a word that most students dread, yet nearly every successful person has a story that begins with one. A scientist repeats an experiment many times before it works. A cricketer is dropped from a team before returning as a captain. A writer receives rejection letters before one book is published. What separates these people from others is not an absence of failure but the choice to continue.

The trouble is that schools and families often measure a child by marks alone. A low score becomes a label, and a child who is labelled soon begins to believe it. Fear of failure then makes her avoid new subjects, new games and even new questions. She does only what is safe, and safe things rarely lead to growth.

A better approach is to treat a mistake as information. When a student studies a wrong answer, she discovers a gap that can be filled. Teachers can help by praising effort and improvement, not just results. Parents can help by asking, 'What did you learn?' rather than 'Why did you fail?' When the fear of failure shrinks, curiosity grows.
