> Honesty is often described as the best policy, but it is not always the easiest one. A student who has not studied may feel tempted to copy. A shopkeeper who has been given extra change may be tempted to keep quiet. Such moments are small and pass quickly, yet it is in these moments that character is built.
>
> A story is told of a young boy who found a purse on the road. It held more money than his family earned in a month. He walked to the address written inside and returned it to its owner. The owner offered him a reward, but the boy refused. 'I only did what was right,' he said. The old man later helped him with his schooling.
>
