1. Read the passage carefully and answer the questions that follow. 10

When we think of a hero, we usually imagine someone in uniform or on a stage. Yet some of the bravest people do their work quietly. A nurse who stays beside a patient through the night, a teacher who stays after school to help a slow learner, and a farmer who walks miles to bring water to his animals all show a kind of courage that rarely appears on television.

Such people share a few qualities. They do their duty even when no one is watching, they put others' needs before their own comfort, and they do not expect applause. Their lives remind us that greatness is not a matter of size but of steadiness.

We can learn from them in small ways. We can thank the sweeper who keeps our street clean, greet the watchman at the gate and help a classmate who is struggling. These acts cost nothing and take little time, but they tell people that their work is seen. A society that notices quiet heroes is a society that grows in kindness.
