SECTION — A (Reading: 20 Marks) — 20 Marks

Read the passages and answer the questions that follow.

1. Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions that follow. 10

Ask a group of students what they would like to have more of and a large number will say, without a moment's hesitation, 'sleep'. It is odd, then, that the thing we all crave is the first thing we sacrifice when examinations come near. We stay awake with books and tea, believing that every extra hour of study is a gift to our future. Doctors and teachers who have watched this habit for years tell a different story.

During sleep the brain is not idle. It sorts the day's experiences, throws out what is useless and stores what is useful. A lesson revised at ten at night and then slept upon is often remembered better than a lesson read at three in the morning. A tired brain also makes careless mistakes: a student who has not slept may know the formula perfectly and still copy a number wrongly. In this way, the hours saved by staying awake are quietly taken back in the examination hall.

Sleep also guards our mood. A child who sleeps less than seven or eight hours is more likely to be irritable, to quarrel with friends and to lose interest in things that were once enjoyable. Parents often scold such children for 'attitude' when what they need is a longer night.

Good sleep needs a little discipline. The room should be dark and cool, and bright screens should be put away at least half an hour before bedtime. Heavy meals and strong tea late in the evening make rest difficult. Above all, there should be a fixed hour for going to bed, even on holidays. A body that knows when to expect sleep is generous in giving it.

(i) Why does the writer find it odd that students lose sleep before examinations? 1

(a) They give up what they most want to have (b) They dislike study

(c) They never feel sleepy (d) They fall ill

(ii) During sleep the brain: 1
