SECTION — A (Reading: 20 Marks) — 20 Marks

Read the passages and answer the questions that follow.

1. Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions that follow. 10

A boy of fifteen, Imran, once spent his Sunday mornings teaching the children of a nearby construction site to read. He had no certificate to give them, no classroom to teach them in, only a few old picture books and a patch of shade under a neem tree. At the end of a year, eleven of those children could read a newspaper headline. 'I didn't do anything great,' he said. 'I only turned up.'

Those three words, 'only turned up', contain the whole secret of voluntary work. Most of us imagine that service to others needs money, time and special training. It needs something simpler: the habit of noticing that someone nearby needs help, and the decision to give a little of what we have. A student can give a hour of explaining a lesson. A retired teacher can give an evening of stories. A shopkeeper can give a corner of his shop for a book-box.

Volunteering also helps the giver. Studies in several countries have found that people who volunteer regularly are happier, more confident and less lonely. In helping, they discover skills they did not know they had. Imran, for example, found that he could explain a difficult idea in the simplest words, a gift that later served him well in his own examinations.

It is true that good intentions are not enough. A volunteer must be reliable. A child who has been promised a lesson and finds no teacher waiting learns a sad lesson in place of the planned one. The true volunteer is therefore not the one who starts with a great show, but the one who keeps coming back, quietly, until the work is done.

(i) Imran's Sunday classes were held: 1

(a) in a library (b) under a neem tree

(c) in his home (d) in a school hall
