1. Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions that follow. 10

On a crowded morning, a flower seller named Kamla found a leather purse near her stall. It contained four thousand rupees, a ration card and a photograph of a smiling woman. For a few minutes she looked at it as one looks at a gift. Then she thought of the owner, who must have been looking for it with a sinking heart, and she carried it to the nearby police post. The owner turned out to be a nurse who had withdrawn her month's salary. She offered Kamla a reward. Kamla refused, saying, 'Take your money, but give me a smile; it is worth more.'

It is easy to praise honesty and just as easy to forget it when we are tempted. The difficulty is that honesty seldom brings an immediate prize. The dishonest man often seems to prosper, while the honest one waits. Yet if we look more closely at people whom we trust, we find that their honesty has made them rich in the only way that matters: when they speak, others listen.

Honesty is also a kind of freedom. A person who tells the truth does not have to remember what he said to whom. He sleeps lightly and wakes without worry. His friends know where they stand with him. A liar, on the other hand, must keep a notebook of his lies in his head and forever fear that the notebook will be found.

Parents can teach this lesson best by example. A child who sees his father return an extra change to the shopkeeper learns more than from a month of sermons. In every home, in every classroom, honesty is taught by the quiet things done when no one is watching.
